COMMUNITY GARDENS GROW NEW CONNECTIONS

By Jennifer Bransford-Koons
Director, Aging & Independence Services

It's twilight on a Monday evening and the new Linda Vista Community Garden is abuzz with activity. A family with young children strolls in to tend to their vegetable garden. Nearby, a group of college students from the University of San Diego circle around their professor to discuss ways in which the garden could be featured in their anthropology class's upcoming digital storytelling project. And down the path, older adults gather to plant in communal garden beds. Brightly colored signs and painted rocks adorn this calm and joyous space.

Located at the edge of Linda Vista Park and built and operated by Bayside Community Center, the new Linda Vista Community Garden site is a far cry from what it was just a few years ago. Previously a vacant and forgotten field, the land had been used as a dumping ground for grass clippings and mulch. Fortunately, visionaries such as Amy Zink, Program Manager with Bayside Community Center's

Environmental Learning Center, saw potential. She was on the lookout for a new home for the community garden that had previously been housed at Bayside but had been uprooted due to redevelopment of the property. Amy and her colleagues realized that having the garden within a public park would increase visibility and accessibility for the community while creating a long-term home for the reestablished garden. They set out to work with the City of San Diego, the San Diego Parks Foundation, Council Member Raul Campillo's office, Carpenters Union Local 619, and others to make their dream a reality.

But the dream took time—four-and-a-half years to be exact. Bayside Community Center was the first to navigate the process, but several community partners helped get the project to the finish line, including the County of San Diego's Aging & Independence Services (AIS). Using Older Adults Recovery and Resilience (OARR) funding from the California Department of Aging, AIS purchased a variety of supplies for the garden, including picnic tables, umbrellas, benches, fertilizer, shovels, trowels, a greenhouse, garden sheds, first aid kits, and class supplies. In addition, the funding was used to hire a Lead Garden Educator and Garden & Nutrition Instructor, Kim Hansen, who has been coordinating and conducting gardening activities and educational opportunities. AIS staff have also provided support and guidance regarding programming efforts, such as the intergenerational garden workdays that tapped into community members of all ages to support the construction of the garden.

This past June, the garden officially opened and was unveiled to the community. The space has transformed into a lush oasis of greenery, produce, and flowers. But plants are not all that's growing in this refuge; social connections and friendships are being fostered as well, and these relationships will sustain gardeners perhaps as much as the food they grow.

Mary is one of the gardeners who has committed to cultivate and volunteer at the garden. She shares Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) compliant communal garden planters with a handful of other older adult budding gardeners. The team, with education support from Amy Zink, also a horticultural therapist, takes turns to tend to the plants and will share the produce when it's time to harvest. Mary shares, "I'm brand new to gardening except for houseplants. It is a nice social space to garden together and learn. It will get me out the door."

Mary recently moved into the Levant Senior Cottages affordable housing development just down the street. She has gotten to know one of her neighbors, Red, not from bumping into him as they come and go from their homes, but because they are both working at the garden. Red is a clay artisan and longtime urban farmer who recently downsized his living situation from his ranch in Campo. At the garden, he has found a new place for his passion projects. Red has volunteered to help regenerate the soil for the garden's in-ground farm plot while passing on this knowledge to interns from the University of San Diego. The clay that he is extracting in the process will be used for future art workshops with garden participants. Mary is also getting to know other gardeners, such as Nicole and Maria (pictured on Page 1).

It is one of Amy's goals to ensure the Linda Vista Community Garden is a true community gathering spot. Amy explains, "the sky's the limit...there is so much that can be done here in the way of community art, food production for low-income Linda Vista residents, and community connections. We want the community to find their passion and place in the garden." Amy and Kim have already held several intergenerational events covering topics such as healthy soils, water conversation, and winter gardening. They have also hosted a rock painting party and seed sowing party. On November

Red, a volunteer, has been sharing his expertise at the Linda Vista Community Garden.

1, there was a Día de Los Muertos-inspired community potluck for the existing gardeners to commune, share food, and honor their loved ones. Based on participant feedback, future classes may cover community composting, growing mushrooms, pollinator homes, herb cultivation, cooking with garden produce, and more.

Amy and Kim invite new participants and volunteers to become part of the community. All are welcome, and the garden was built to ADA standards with accessible pathways, planters, and picnic tables to accommodate wheelchair users. ## HONORING VETERAN VOLUNTEERS

In recognition of Veterans Day this November, RSVP would like to give special thanks to volunteers who are Veterans of the US Armed Forces. Here are two volunteers who are making a difference in their communities:

Ms. Ramsey served in the U.S. Navy for four years, on active duty during the Vietnam Era. She then served 18.5 years in the reserves, including during Operation Desert Storm. In 1989, Ms. Ramsey won Sailor of the Year at the Balboa Navy Hospital. In 2022, she was awarded as Woman of Distinction by Mayor Todd Gloria from the City of San Diego.

Ms. Ramsey describes feeling a sense of joy in helping others. Her peers describe her as a brave, goal-oriented go-getter who is family-oriented always shares from her heart. Ms. Ramsey believes sharing something about oneself is the greatest reward and a powerful way to connect with others, whether it's a recipe or a statement. We extend our heartfelt thanks to Ms. Ramsey, for your service to our community.

Eugene "Gene" Goldman has been a dedicated RSVP volunteer for the San Diego County Sheriff's Office in Poway and their Volunteer Sheriff Patrol (VSP) since January 2023. Throughout his service, Gene has accumulated 381 lifetime hours. A Veteran of the United States Navy who served during the Vietnam Era, Gene was inspired by his father's service in the Navy during World War II.

In his volunteer role, Gene promotes safety throughout the community and ensures that traffic rules are followed. Gene has always had a talent for helping his community, having served as a scout leader, Freemason, and Little League coach. He finds fulfillment in being part of something bigger than himself and bringing a sense of unity to the community. Gene shares, "Just about every week, I get to spend a few hours in the company of somebody who comes from an entirely different background, with different experiences and different outlooks on life, and we get to work together doing something good."

His service has also inspired his family. Gene notes, "My grandchildren love the fact that I put on my uniform every week and go out to help make Poway better. I have worked with some exceptional people, and we all have one thing in common: we are members of the VSP." Thank you, Gene, for your service and dedication to the community!

MENTAL HEALTH RESOURCES

Everyone experiences stress, sadness, and anxiety from time to time – it’s a normal part of life. However, if you are feeling overwhelmed, depressed, or unable to do the things you once enjoyed, it may be time to assess your emotional health and talk to a professional. Taking care of your mental health is an important part of managing your overall health and wellbeing. Experiencing mental health challenges can feel lonely, isolating, or hopeless at times. However, many people (1 in 5 adults in the San Diego region) are living with mental health challenges and most of those people recover.

There are a variety of tools that can help you get well, including medication, talk therapy, group support, self-directed wellness plans, and many other options. The sooner you reach out for support and start using the tools that work for you, the better your outcome is likely to be. Free mental health resources and information are available through San Diego County’s It’s Up to Us campaign at <https://up2sd.org/resources>. Help is also available 24/7 through the Access and Crisis Line at (888) 724-7240.
