It is imperative that we take into account our disproportionately impacted minoritized communities. Keep in mind that many of our families are still excluded because of lack of technology. Breaking up our communities will weaken silence their voices. For example these opportunities to speakup don't reach many of the families/communities that will be impacted. We need to explain the real outcomes of redistricting in a way that is relatable to many of our families who are still below federal poverty income, immigrant, other than English speakers. Many communities still don't have the same capital, and are not afforded the same opportunities to speak up against breaking up certain district areas that are at risk of being devided, and thus reducing their ability to thrive amongs more affluent community voters.
